through several mediums and much more. It is a place where any art lover feels at home as they flow through the pages and information found on net-art. It is a site that finds lost artwork and strives to give them life again. As net-art states that they show original content, projects, & websites. Ever since the rise of internet art in the 90's, the site has a perfect flow into the mainstream art world today. Their website may not be much to look at first, as it can be confusing where to look for information but once the site becomes more comfortable, it becomes second nature. The site features a news section, art projects, artist clubs, a popular today section, a search bar and tabs to navigate the site. So overall set up like a usual website but the color scheme is bland as it only features shades of gray, black, and white. This could be to keep the focus on the art works but it makes the site feel boring and dated. Overall, net-art.org is a great website to visit when looking for inspiration and original works of art.
