Net Art

Basically, it is art that lives on the internet and can only exist because of the internet.

Net Art came about when the internet became available. There was net art before this time but was done through fax and telecommunications. The first instance of this is Vera Frenkel's String Games.
It's origins are in the Dadaand performance art genres.

The first works done on the Internet used the various codes in the sites and engines as the themes of their work.

This is one art form that can use cloning and copying to create thier own work.
This is mostly done through hacking and making a performance-like piece out of it.

In this age people are using the concept of net art more.
For example, people are using video games to create their own works
A group used the Halo engine to create their own series.
